CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS TO MILITARY SERVICE

Briefing paper regarding the OHCHR of Türkiye

For enquiries please contact Ms.Hülya Üçpınar- hulyaucpınar@gmail.com

Introduction

The situation of conscientious objectors to military service has not improved since 2022.

Turkey still maintains a system of obligatory military service. All male citizens become liable for service from the beginning of the calendar year of their 20th birthday. There is no recognition of the right to conscientious objection to military service, resulting in repeated prosecution (including imprisonment) and a limitation of rights which the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) has described as ‘civil death’ and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Expressions about the military and conscientious objection are criminalized under “alienating the public from military service”. Turkey continues to take no action in response to a series of European Court of Human Rights judgements finding violations of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; prohibition of cruel, or degrading treatment; and the right to fair trial (in cases where the applicants were tried and convicted by military courts).¹

Since 2012 conscientious objection to military service has not been on the agenda of the Government, rather the focus has been on shortening the duration of the military service in general and the introduction of the possibility of shortened military service by payment. In 2019 a new Law on Conscription² was adopted and amended in 2022³ reducing the military service to six months and one month shortened military service by payment.

There is no clear data on the number of conscientious objectors to military service. An application for information was sent to the Ministry of National Defence requesting information on how many persons applied to the Ministry seeking exemption as conscientious objectors between 2016-2020.

The Ministry's response stated that "there is no legal possibility to fulfil your request".⁴ However, Minister of National Defence, Hulusi Akar, stated in 2019 that "Regarding conscientious objection, in our country of 82 million, 28 persons applied in 2017, 23 persons in 2018, and 18 persons so far in 2019."⁵ According to the Action Plan by the authorities of Türkiye submitted to the CoE CM in March 2023, 152 persons indicated that they were conscientious objectors.⁶ The Conscientious Objection Watch⁷ have registered 465 conscientious objectors but believe the number to be much higher.

Priority Issues

Non-recognition of right to conscientious objection to military service (violation of Article 18)

There is no recognition in law of the right to conscientious objection to military service (which in the jurisprudence of the Human Rights Committee (HRC) inheres in Article 18).

Prosecution of Conscientious Objectors to Military Service (violation of Articles 9 and 18)

Conscientious objectors to military service face fines and imprisonment. We have documented 85 cases of COs who have been subject to repeated arrests, repeated fines and repeated prosecutions and punishments.

Civil Death of Conscientious Objectors (violation of multiple Articles (listed) and Article 26)

Passports and identity documents contain a bar code linked to the person's entry on the GBTS (General Information Gathering System) which includes the person's military service status. If the person has not done military service, they can be taken directly to the registration office and can be charged if not willing to register. In 2006 the European Court of Human Rights described the impact of non-recognition of the right to conscientious objection to military service as civil death, amounting to a violation of Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights, due to the breadth of civil and political rights that are violated.⁸

The perpetual fear of arrest when interacting with State authorities means that conscientious objectors:

- are unable to register to vote and vote (violation of Article 25)
- are unable to register travel within the country as a result of stop and search and identity checks (violation of Article 12)
- are unable to register access education and employment including through barriers to employment in public service and private sector for those who have not done military service and imprisonment for employers who do not fire employees classed as deserters or evaders (violation of Article 26)
- are unable to register be included in the social security system and they will not be entitled to a pension (violation Article 26)
- have difficulties with holding their own bank accounts due confiscation of money by the government to cover administrative fines, or fear of confiscation of money (violation Article 26).

Criminalization of Expression on Conscientious Objection (violation of Article 19)

Article 318 of the Penal Code of Turkey criminalizes “alienating the public from military service”; in 2013, this was amended to specifically address statements or conduct that “encourage and inspire people to desert or not to participate in military service”. In November 2016 the European Court of Human Rights found that application of this law violated the right to freedom of expression in a case where a conscientious objector was prosecuted and sentenced to prison for reading a statement of solidarity with conscientious objectors from another county.⁹

National Policy on Conscientious Objection

Turkey’s policy on conscientious objection to military service has been dominated by a strong opposition to it as a right that is protected under freedom of thought, conscience and religion. Changes over the years have been related to the nature of punishment of conscientious objectors and this change has been triggered by the findings of international human rights mechanisms the ECtHR and the HRC, respectively. The exceptions have been the short-lived momentum gained during 2011- 2012 in the context of the drafting of the new constitution and the two military court decisions that considered the right to conscientious objection to military service in their reasonings. These, however, had significant limitations and did not have any lasting impact.

Lack of legislation

Actions taken by the opposition parties within the Parliament in the forms of parliamentary questions and introduction of bills received either no response at all, or an answer that did not address the legislative amendments on conscientious objection or the situation of objectors in the previous years.¹⁰ The policy of the government has not changed and no legal amendments have been introduced to improve the situation of the conscientious objectors, however, the Government presented the abolition of military courts through constitutional amendments made in 2017, including the Supreme Judicial Military Court and the Supreme Administrative Military Court, in the Government’s communication to the CoE Committee of Ministers (CM) as fulfilling one of the criteria in the enforcement of the ECtHR judgments on the Ülke group of cases.

In his declaration to the media Minister of National Defence, Hulusi Akar, stated in 2019 that there is no provision on conscientious objection in Turkish legislation and no preparatory work that is being carried out.¹¹ A freedom of information request was sent to the Ministry of National Defence requesting information on how many persons applied to the Ministry seeking exemption as conscientious objectors between 2016-2020. The Ministry's response stated that "there is no legal possibility to fulfill your request".¹²

In March 2023, an MP submitted a written parliamentary question referring to a situation of a conscientious objector, Diyar Doğan, to the Presidency of the Turkish Parliament. Nevertheless the parliamentary question was not processed on the grounds that "the text of the parliamentary question would not include the personal opinions of the MP or third parties".¹³ The same MP submitted two other parliamentary questions, referring to Gökhan Binici's¹⁴ and Serkan Şimşek's¹⁵ situations were responded by the Minister of National Defence as 'Military service in the Republic of Turkey is carried out in accordance with the provisions of the Law No. 7179 on Military Service', on 15.08.2023.

The Government's responses to the Council of Europe Committee of Ministers (CoE CM)

Following the ECtHR judgment on Ülke v. Turkey in 2006, the Government has engaged with the CM in 2010, 2012, 2015, 2018, 2020, 2021 and 2023 over the supervision of the enforcement of judgments on conscientious objection to military service cases. Since 2006 numerous cases brought by conscientious objectors from Turkey have led to findings of violations of several Convention rights. These are compiled into the Ülke group of cases and brought under enhanced supervision. Turkey's focus has centered on individual measures through payment of compensation and arrangement of dismissal or discharge on the basis of medical reports indicating that the applicants were not fit for military service and annulment of arrest warrants.¹⁶ As of 2018 the Government informed the CM that "military service by payment" was an alternative whereby an eligible person could by paying a certain sum become exempted from the obligation of military service.¹⁷

Non-implementation of ULKE case

In its communications to the CM, the Government responds that Ülke's situation has been improved and there are no criminal cases and arrest warrants. Nevertheless, Ülke is still a "military person" and, thus, a "deserter" in accordance with the law. Accordingly, he is subjected to the regime for deserters (cannot participate in the elections) and other human rights limitations that cause the situation of "civil death" as the ECtHR stated in its findings in 2006.¹⁸ His application to the Constitutional Court in 2014 is still pending without any progress.¹⁹

He remains under the risk of criminal procedures. On 17.01.2023 he was subjected to a GBT search by the police when he was in a park in Izmir, and was charged with not completing his military service. An official record was issued. This record was issued on a tablet and he was not given a copy. Therefore, as it is not available, it is not known what his legal status in relation to military service is recorded. Pursuant to this record, a notification was sent to Ulke stating that he has to apply to the nearest military branch within 2 months in order to complete his incomplete military service, otherwise he will be subject to administrative fines and criminal prosecution.²⁰ He objected to these proceedings and is waiting for the outcome.

Lack of mechanisms to apply

Currently, there is no mechanism to which conscientious objectors can make an application. When conscientious objectors send a letter of application stating that they cannot fulfil their military service obligations on account of being conscientious objectors they are sent a letter stating that under current legislation exemption from military service is not an option. A number of conscientious objectors informed the Association for Conscientious Objection that when they applied to the Ministry of National Defence they received letters stating that, under the Law on Military Service exemption from military service is not a possibility.²¹

Recently Lawyer Gökhan Soysal applied to the Grand National Assembly, General Directorate of Conscription and Sivas Conscription Office for the annulment of the proceedings in which he was deemed to be liable for military service and for the lifting of the arrest warrant against him on the grounds of conscientious objection on 17. 05.2023. Nevertheless he has not received any response from any of these institutions.²²

In 2020 the General Directorate of Conscription of the Ministry of National Defence sent a letter in connection to the Yazıcı case. The letter outlines the manner in which applications of conscientious objection will be processed. Applications made to the military service branch will not be sent to the General Directorate on Conscription, instead the military service branches will draft a negative letter in accordance with the legislation. The conscientious objector's application and the military service branch's letter will be sent to the military service branch where the "liable" is registered. Military Service Branches are asked to send information on conscientious objection applications in March, June, September and December to the Ministry of National Defence.²³ The same document states that the Ministry of Defence should not be informed on repetitive applications by the same conscientious objectors.

CoE CM Decision and Notes of 7 June 2023²⁴

The CM recalled that the cases regarding conscientious objection, concern the applicants' repetitive prosecutions and convictions for refusing to carry out compulsory military service as pacifists and conscientious objectors, as a result of which they are compelled to lead clandestine lives amounting to “civil death”, and the absence of a procedure to establish their status as conscientious objectors. The CM; strongly urged the Turkish authorities to take all necessary measures to ensure that all negative consequences of the violations found by the Court are rapidly eliminated in respect of all these applicants; strongly urged the Turkish authorities to provide an action plan with concrete proposals for legislative amendments to address the Court’s findings in this group before the next examination of these cases.

At its last examination of the cases, the Committee regretted that no progress had been achieved despite the fact that the authorities undertook to move forward with legislative amendments and invited them therefore to provide an action plan with concrete proposals for measures to address the Court’s findings in this group of cases.

As briefly described above, Turkey’s policy toward the recognition of the right to conscientious objection to military service remained firmly opposed to its protection under the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. Continued punitive measures against conscientious objectors have been an integral part of national policy.

Consequences of lack of legislation and alternatives to the compulsory system

No legislative measures have been taken to address violations of human rights stemming from the non-recognition of the right to conscientious objection to military service. Furthermore, there is no indication that a law is being prepared. Practice shows the contrary, unfortunately.

"Shortened military service by payment" does not constitute an alternative

Since 2019, with the adoption of the Law on Conscription, shortened military service through payment of a sum of money has become possible under the Turkish military service system. Under Article 9 of the Law on Conscription those who pay a certain sum that is determined by the Ministry of Defence and complete one month of basic military training will be considered to have completed their military service. In case the number of those who opt for this option exceeds the number determined for the shortened military service through payment those who can opt for this option will be determined by draw.²⁵

Those who have been draft evading²⁶ and evading²⁷ in any period, from the date of entering the military service age until the date of application for military service for pay, have to pay an additional price.²⁸

Those who are eligible for the shortened military service through payment option and yet forfeit this right will not be given the option again.²⁹ *Refund is made upon request.*³⁰

²⁸ Article 9/7.

²⁹ Article 9/2.

³⁰ Article 9/5.

Shortened military service through payment is not an option in times of war and mobilization.

It is important to underline that shortened military service through payment is not a suitable option for conscientious objectors and it is not available for all conscientious objectors. Unfortunately, in the consideration of an asylum case in the Netherlands, shortened military service by payment was considered as “a right” to justify rejection of asylum claims.³¹ Similarly, in the case of B.Ş. a Turkish court also considered the shortened military service by payment as an option for conscientious or other objectors to military service.³²

In their correspondence with the CoE CM, the Turkish authorities have referred to the possibility of fulfilling the obligation to perform military service by payment. However, clearly, this cannot be considered a solution to human rights violations that conscientious objectors are subject to.

Firstly, the payment option does not constitute an alternative service therefore the finding of the ECtHR that the interference Article 9 originates from the lack of alternative service is not addressed. Accordingly, the CoE CM concluded in 2023 that “‘paid military service’ and reduction of the length of compulsory military service do not constitute an alternative to mandatory military service which would remedy the fundamental problems identified by the Court in these cases.”³³

Secondly, for the second half of 2023 approx. 4.450 € must be paid to benefit from this option and this is an amount about 11 times the net minimum wage (in Sep 2023, 11.402 TL, approx. 395 €). Furthermore, evaders and draft evaders have to pay an additional amount of 1.784,29 TL (approx. 62 €) for each month they are considered as evaders.³⁴ The prohibitively expensive amount requires the objectors to pay an amount that is almost one year's salary in addition to the amount they need to pay for their absence in the army because of their conscientious objection.

As it is explained in the further paragraphs, people who do not fulfil the military service cannot be hired neither in the private sector nor in the state institutions, therefore, it is almost impossible for the objectors to earn such money to pay for the military service even if they are willing to do so.

Finally, everyone who opts for military service by payment must still perform basic military training for one month. This requires wearing of the uniform, obedience to orders, and all routine aspects of ordinary military service. This is not acceptable for individuals who object to military service and wearing of the uniform categorically.

Security checks, issue of official records and administrative fines

The Law on Conscription sets forth the manner in which evaders and deserters will be tracked and the administrative fines applicable to them. Once the administrative monetary fine is final, criminal proceedings are initiated under the Military Criminal Law. After the finalization of the first fine, every official record becomes a criminal case, however conscientious objectors can be fined several times due to the long period of finalization of the fines. This process is outlined in the chart attached to the submission.

Draft evaders and evaders are tracked in accordance with the rules laid down in Article 26(1) of the Law on Conscription. Accordingly, draft evaders and evaders are reported to the Ministry of Interior in order to ensure their apprehension to perform their military service obligation. When draft evaders (yoklama kaçağı) and evaders (bakaya) are apprehended, mostly during general security checks (GBT), they are issued an "official record" (tutanak) and released. These records are the legal basis of issuing administrative fines. (Please see the administrative and legal proceedings flow in the Chart attached to the submission)

Administrative fines must be paid within a month. If this fine is not contested, it becomes final in 15 days. Conscientious objectors who reject the payment of the administrative fine are faced with a risk of being apprehended repeatedly after every 15 days and to have an official report issued.

Repetitive apprehensions and, accordingly, official records

Objectors inform the Association³⁵ that they come across stop and check very frequently that affects their daily lives seriously. Apprehensions may happen anywhere, anytime and under different situations - on the way to school or to a hospital or while traveling or while going to your wedding. An objector reported that he has been issued 30 official records so far³⁶; another was apprehended 8 times in five years according to his court files.³⁷ Kamil Murat Demir, who is a journalist and frequently travels for work, has been apprehended approximately 60 times over the course of 2016-2021.³⁸ Furthermore he was apprehended 6 times in the last three months; on 8 June, 14 July, 30 July, 3 August, 26 August, 9 September 2023.³⁹

Lack of database regarding official records

Official records constitute the basis of fines and penalties in accordance with Article 24 of the Law on Conscription and Article 63 of the Military Criminal Law. Despite their importance, they are not uniform, often sketchy and are not handled in a consistent manner.

In many cases conscientious objectors are not provided with a copy of the official record and not all are registered in the national database. Consequently, conscientious objectors can access these official records only in the case there is an administrative/criminal measure taken against them.

Although the Government informed the CoE CM in March 2023 that the number of CO's is 152 since 2006, the CoE CM invited the authorities to provide statistical information on the number of conscientious objectors in Türkiye and on administrative fines, prosecutions and convictions delivered in this connection since the Ülke judgment became final in 2006, in June 2023.⁴⁰

Excessive administrative fines that follow official records

In addition to the repetitive character of stop and checks and official reports, administrative fines can be excessive. i.a., Cihan Aydın was issued a 46.225,56 TL administrative fine on 12 April 2023⁴¹ (approx. 2.175€, minimum wage is approx. 295€).

³⁵ The objectors keep informing the Conscientious Objection Watch since January 2022, after the closure of the Association.

⁴¹ Eyüpsultan Conscription Office, No.2023-70

According to the report of the Association for Conscientious Objection, published in May 2021, conscientious objectors were fined a total of 575,517 Turkish Liras (approx. 37.000 € as of March 2022) in 85 case files until April 2021. ⁴²

While some persons contest the monetary administrative fines, most individuals are not able to appeal because they are not familiar with the legal process. Between April 2022-September 2023, out of 95 conscientious objectors that contacted the Conscientious Objection Watch, 20 said they did not know how to contest the monetary administrative fines, 35 said they did not contest and only five said they contested. Two out of five stated that their appeals were rejected and the fines became final.

Prosecution of conscientious objection

The Military Criminal Law enshrines important provisions on criminal measures applicable to conscientious objectors. Under Article 63 of the Military Criminal Code No 1632, those who do not surrender to perform their military service “after the administrative fine under Article 89 of the Law on Military Service is final” will be sentenced to imprisonment for up to 3 years depending on the duration of desertion. (Pls see the administrative and legal proceedings flow in the Chart attached).

Almost all criminal cases result in convictions. In few of the cases in the first-degree courts, where violations of the Law on Notifications, or procedural issues were raised, conscientious objectors to military service were acquitted.

İnan Mayıs Aru has been involved in 11 criminal cases so far, including in local and appellate courts, related to the investigations against him and was sentenced to 6 months and 7 days as a result of all these proceedings.⁴³

In the case of Alparslan Kaya the court ruled 4 months 5 days imprisonment however the pronouncement of the verdict was suspended.⁴⁴

The appeal against the judicial fine of 6,000 liras imposed on conscientious objector U.G. because of being a deserter, was rejected by the 5th Criminal Chamber of Erzurum Regional Court of Appeal.⁴⁵ In another case, the appeal against the 10 month prison sentence given to U.G. was also rejected and the decision was finalized.⁴⁶

Similar to the other cases, the procedural irregularities related to the notifications, unconstitutionality and the right to conscientious objection were not discussed in the judgements.

Denial of public rights and execution of sentences made heavier by criminal courts

Criminal Courts, when ruling on the application of Criminal Law provisions in favor of the accused and on whether public rights (such as guardianship) should be restricted⁴⁷, consider whether the person "regrets" the action and whether he will commit the same crime.

⁴⁷ Turkish Criminal Code, Article 58 and Article 53.

Due to the nature of conscientious objection, the actions of conscientious objectors are not single acts but are continuous, therefore the provisions are not applied in favor of conscientious objectors. In addition to being constantly exposed to stop and check, being repeatedly fined and prosecuted, conscientious objectors' sentences are not converted to monetary fines, and they can be banned from benefiting from certain public rights if the judges decide they are persistent.⁴⁸ The ban from public rights may include prohibition on becoming a legal guardian or taking a role in the management of a foundation or association, even not being able to carry out a profession that is subject to registration in a professional organization, such as a lawyer.

The courts are not convinced that the objectors do violate the law again and therefore decided not to convert the prison sentence, into a judicial fine⁴⁹ or the sentence is not suspended⁵⁰.

Lack of effective domestic remedies

It is important to state at the outset that an effective domestic remedy for conscientious objectors is non-existent since Turkey does not recognize the right to conscientious objection and courts, consistently, have not utilized Article 90 of the Constitution which provides the possibility to directly apply relevant provisions of international human rights treaties where national legislation is incompatible with the former. Instead, courts apply legislation applicable to evaders and deserters. As long as the legal status of conscientious objectors remain as evader or draft evader, they will continue to be subject to administrative and judicial fines. This is not compatible with the ne bis in idem principle. Nevertheless, conscientious objectors feel that their direct applications to international human rights mechanisms that require the exhaustion of domestic remedies, may consider their applications inadmissible if they do not first exhaust domestic remedies - even if it is evident that since the right to conscientious objection is not recognized their claims will not be successful.

The local courts⁵¹ have been referring to a decision of the 19th Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court concluding that *"It is not possible to accept the applications and judgments of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) by conscientious objectors as a valid reason for not performing compulsory military service"*⁵² which is not accessible through open sources, and thus can not be examined.

Recently 7th Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court rejected an appeal by a conscientious objector on the same ground on 20.03.2023⁵³; "As stated in the decision of 1st Board of Chambers of the (abolished) Military Court of Appeals dated 09.03.2006 and numbered 2006/84-62, military service is compulsory according to Article 72 of the Constitution and the first paragraph of Article 4 of the Military Service Law No. 7179, and this situation is in line with the content of subparagraph (b) of the third paragraph of Article 4 of the European Convention on Human Rights and the principle of leaving options other than compulsory military service to the choice of the signatory countries, and although many countries that have signed the European Convention on Human Rights accept conscientious objection as a right, there is no binding rule on this issue and our country has not recognized such a right, Therefore, it is not binding on the country that does not recognize it as a right, and considering that the trial and conviction of the defendant for his act, which is considered a crime according to the domestic law of that country, is not contrary to the European Convention on Human Rights, the reasons of the defendant's defense counsel for appealing that the defendant, who is a civilian person, has the right to conscientious objection according to international conventions and that the patriotic service to be fulfilled in the armed forces is not the only way envisaged by the Constitution have not been considered."

Accordingly, local courts have started to refer to this judgement as jurisprudence.⁵⁴

Individual complaint to the Constitutional Court does not constitute an effective remedy

With the introduction of the individual application mechanism, conscientious objectors, too, have had this possibility since 23 September 2012. This possibility, however, cannot be considered a general measure to prevent similar violations for two reasons.

First, there is a need for legislative changes that recognize the right to conscientious objection and establish an independent mechanism to receive and process applications.

Secondly, between 2012 and September 2023, at least 64 individual applications have been made by both from Jehovah's Witnesses and anti-militarist conscientious objectors to the Constitutional Court according to the database of the Conscientious Objection Watch. A number of applications from 2015-6, made by conscientious objectors.⁵⁵ Some of the applicants have more than one application.⁵⁶

Although in 2016, it was reported in the media that the Constitutional Court referred an individual application involving conscientious objection to the Plenary, the Constitutional Court is yet to deliver a judgement dealing directly with the right to conscientious objection at the time of writing of this submission.

The earliest application known to the authors is Osman Murat Ülke's application from 2014.⁵⁷ The basis for the non-implementation of the ECtHR judgment is a structural problem, that of non-recognition of the right to conscientious objection. For this reason, the implementation of the pilot decision procedure in accordance with Article 75 of the Rules of Procedure of the Constitutional Court is requested.

In applications made to the Constitutional Court, decisions for stay of execution are also requested in order to prevent further violations of the applicants' rights. However, the Constitutional Court either does not examine these requests at all and does not even provide a response or rejects them on the grounds that "there is no serious danger to the life or security or moral integrity of the applicant".

⁵⁴ e.g. Hatay 1. Criminal Court of Peace, 2023/859 D.İş, 02.07.2023

⁵⁷ Constitutional Court, Second Section, 2014/10474 E.

Although Davut Erkan,⁵⁸ who worked as a lawyer, in his application of 2015 and after official records issued against him requested interim measures on 23.01.2018 and 02.04.2019, he did not receive any response from the Constitutional Court. Similarly, no response was received in the case of Vedat Zencir, who made an individual application to the court in 2015, requests for interim measures in 2016 following measures taken against him.⁵⁹

In the individual application of Kamil Murat Demir,⁶⁰ who was apprehended more than 60 times, and in the individual application of U.G.,⁶¹ who has a deserter status and has been sentenced to imprisonment, the Constitutional Court decided that "there is no serious danger to the life or security or moral integrity of the applicant" without thoroughly examining the applications.

The Constitutional Court is expected to deliver a judgment in line with the ECtHR jurisprudence in order to be considered an effective domestic remedy. In light of its decision on the case of Y.⁶² and its postponement of the applications so far, however, it has not yet functioned as an effective domestic remedy.

This remedy in itself does not constitute a general measure to prevent similar violations. The need for legislative changes that recognize the right to conscientious objection, establish an independent mechanism to receive and process applications as well as the institution of civilian alternative service remain.

Situation that leads to "civil death"

In addition to interference in their right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, conscientious objectors experience restrictions on a number of human rights. Once a conscientious objector to military service evades the draft or deserts the military public authorities identify them as evaders or deserters. This status becomes part of the information linked to their national identity number and information. Furthermore, it has implications for the exercise of a number of human rights. In Ülke v. Turkey, the ECtHR had stated that "The clandestine life, amounting almost to "civil death", which the applicant has been compelled to adopt is incompatible with the punishment regime of a democratic society". This situation remains a reality for conscientious objectors as a result of the unending cycle of stop and checks, fines, criminal prosecutions and restrictions on a wide range of human rights.

The Turkish authorities' limited response to conscientious objection does not address these issues. The implications of the non-recognition of the right to conscientious objection on other human rights are also not considered by the international human rights compliance control mechanisms. These rights include, inter alia, participation in public affairs and the right to vote, freedom of movement, right to education, opportunity to earn one's living.

The Association for Conscientious Objection and Conscientious Objection Watch⁶³ received 92 responses to the survey on the restrictions experienced by men, liable to military service, between April 2022 and September 2023. See below:

Between April 2022-September 2023: 92 responses on the types of restrictions experienced by applicants

Cycle of prosecutions and penalties

The cycle of prosecutions and penalties is leading to a "civil death" as the ECtHR described it in their Ulke v.Turkey 2006 ruling: "the numerous criminal proceedings brought against the applicant, the cumulative effects of the ensuing criminal convictions and the constant alternation between prosecution and imprisonment, together with the possibility that he would face prosecution for the rest of his life, are disproportionate to the aim of ensuring that he performs his military service. They are aimed more at repressing the applicant's intellectual personality, inspiring in him feelings of fear, anguish and vulnerability capable of humiliating and debasing him and breaking his resistance and will. The clandestine life, amounting almost to 'civil death', which the applicant has been compelled to adopt is incompatible with the punishment regime of a democratic society."

The ECtHR found this to be a violation of the prohibition on torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. This remains a reality for conscientious objectors given the continuing restrictions on a wide range of human rights in addition to the unending cycle of prosecution, trials and fines.

Situation of İnan Mayıs Aru illustrates a striking example. He has involved in 11 criminal cases so far, including in local and appellate courts, related to the investigations against him; Tavşanlı 2nd Criminal Court of First Instance 2017/28E., 2017/775K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2018/25E. 2018/3K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2018/308E, 2018/341K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2018/357E, 2018/375K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2018/365E., 2018/389 K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2018/443 E 2018/510 K; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2017/400 E. 2020/105 K.; 11th Criminal Chamber of Bursa Regional Court of Appeals, 2020/2684 E. 2021/2540 K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2021/754 E. 2022/390 K.; Tavşanlı 1st Criminal Court of First Instance 2022/882 E. 2022/867 K.; 11th Criminal Chamber of Bursa Regional Court of Appeals, 2023/18 E. 2023/693 K. He was sentenced to 6 months and 7 days as a result of all these proceedings.

Therefore, conscientious objectors cannot exercise some basic human rights as a result of the violation of their right to conscientious objection to military service inherent in their right to freedom of thought, conscience and belief.

Restriction of other human rights

The state of "almost civil death" that the ECtHR has referred to in Ülke v. Turkey in 2006 remains a reality for conscientious objectors given the continued restrictions on a wide range of human rights in addition to the unending cycle of prosecution, trials and fines. The Government remains silent to address these issues.

Participation in public affairs and the right to vote

Under Article 67(1) of the Constitution, citizens have the right to vote, to be elected, to engage in political activities independently or in a political party, and to take part in a referendum. However, 67(5) stipulates that "privates and corporals at arms, cadets, ... shall not vote".

It is interesting that even Osman Murat Ülke, who applied to the ECtHR in order to seek remedy to the human rights violations he experienced as a consequence of being a conscientious objector in Turkey, after having won his case in 2006 continues to be subject to restrictions, including on the right to vote. Even though the Turkish authorities are under an obligation to eliminate any consequences of the violation on Ülke, his status in Turkey remains "soldier" and "deserter". Therefore, in accordance with Article 67 of the Constitution, he cannot vote. Before the 31 March 2019 general elections, he received his voter card. However, on the day of the election when he went to vote, he was told that there was a note indicating that he could not vote, and the electoral officers did not allow him to vote.⁶⁴ On the other hand he didn't experience any restriction during the May 2023 election, on the contrary to the previous practice and regulations.

Another objector came across a stop and check and was taken to the local Military Service Branch in February 2019. Even though he informed the authorities that he is a conscientious objector, the authorities transferred him to the military unit without informing him and recorded him as a "soldier" in the database. He learnt this six days before the elections through a telephone message he received from the provincial election council. Since he had not received the document (sülüs) indicating he is a cadet and thus did not yet know he was given a "military person" (asker kişi) status, he could not vote, nor could he carry out his role as an electoral observer he had taken on as a member of the political party with which he is affiliated.⁶⁵

⁶⁴ Interviews conducted by his lawyer Hülya Üçpınar in January 2021 and September 2023.

⁶⁵ Karaca, E., Vicdani Retçi Asker Diye Kaydedildi Oy Kullanamadı, 3 April 2019, Bianet.

As stated above, every citizen has the right to be elected under Article 67 of the Constitution, however, in order to be eligible to be elected as a member of parliament, under Article 76 of the Constitution, one must be exempt or deferred from military service or must have fulfilled military service. Since conscientious objectors' status remains as persons who have not fulfilled their military service, they are not eligible to stand for elections.

The number of people that cannot exercise their rights during the elections is 17 (out of 92) in accordance with the data recorded by Conscientious Objection Watch between April 2022 and September 2023.

Right to Freedom of movement

Article 23 of the Constitution protects everyone's freedom of movement.

There is no explicit restriction on the freedom of movement of persons who are performing their military service. However, as demonstrated below, a direct consequence of the combination of widespread practice of stop and search and identity checks (GBT) and Article 26 of the Law on Conscription on the tracking of draft evaders and evaders, is that conscientious objectors are subject to stop and search, apprehension and official record is issued against them. To avoid these proceedings conscientious objectors restrict themselves from travelling.

Under Article 26(1) of the Law on Conscription, draft evaders, evaders and deserters are reported to the Ministry of Interior to ensure their apprehension to perform their military service. Once they are apprehended, they are either brought to the nearest Conscription Branch and/ or released, given an official record, and asked to submit to the nearest Conscription Branch within 15 days under Article 36(2).

The freedom of movement of conscientious objectors is highly restricted due to a number of possible checks that would lead to their being identified as draft evaders, evaders or deserters. This, then, starts a process that leads to prosecution.

The General Information Gathering (Genel Bilgi Toplama, GBT) is an identity checking technology that police officers use to access up to date information on persons, including their status related to military service, criminal or suspect records. This is used during identity or passport controls. Furthermore, identity checks at hotels and general searches in intercity bus rides lead to restrictions for conscientious objectors. In residential areas, the police force, and outside of residential areas, the gendarmerie is authorised to stop cars and carry out checks. Such checks are also carried out as a result of information that is mandatory to be provided to the police or the gendarmerie by hotels and similar accommodations on the guests who check in. As soon as they are identified as evaders or deserters, either on the road or at the hotel, they are apprehended, and they are either brought to a police station and/or to military branches or an official record is issued at the place of apprehension. At times, because a police officer or a gendarme does not have the official record slip with them this process may take hours. This process could potentially happen in the life of a conscientious objector as many times as he may encounter the police or gendarmerie.

Many conscientious objectors have reported to the Association for Conscientious Objection that they feel compelled to change their lifestyle in order to avoid stop and search practices. Gökhan Soysal says in the report by the Conscientious Objection Watch released in 2023⁶⁶;

'As a lawyer and also one of the lawyers of conscientious objectors and anti-war activists with whom I was in contact, I frequently travel to other cities. Since I had to stay overnight during these trips, I was issued records many times as a result of GBT checks...I even hesitated to attend hearings in other cities where there was a high probability of a verdict hearing, except in cases where my clients were under arrest. When I traveled out of the city for these hearings, I tried to stay at my friends', if any, or in the places of acquaintances of the clients. I had to stay in the apartments of people I did not know at all.'

Ersan Uğur Gör tells his experience in the same report as *'When I go to other cities for work, the customers book hotels, but I explain my situation and stay without registering. I don't mind being issued a record, but I don't prefer to be dragged out of bed in the middle of the night. For this reason, I prefer not to stay in hotels as much as possible.'*⁶⁷

As it is shown in the graphic above, the number of people (either draft evader or evader or deserter) who have experienced similar restrictions and reported that their freedom of movement has been restricted is 52 out of 92, between April 2022 and September 2023. The real number is unknown.

Right to education

Under Article 35 of the Law on Conscription the high-school or university registration of students who have not fulfilled their military service will be postponed until the end of the age of 29. Under specific conditions the age limitation might be prolonged until the end of 38.

As a consequence of the "legality" of the regulation, many people do not challenge the administrative decisions of the universities and furthermore they give up trying to register when they reach the age that is stated in the article. Nevertheless, compulsory character of conscription and the lack of legal arrangements for conscientious objection continues to breach the right to education.

The number of people (either draft evader or evader) whose right to education was restricted and who reported the violation is 17 out of 92 between April 2022 and September 2023. The real number is unknown.

Opportunity to earn one's living

Article 48 and 49 of the Constitution protect everyone's right to work.

Under Article 41 (2) of the Law on Conscription, evaders and draft evaders cannot be employed in civil service or private service and those who employ them will be prosecuted. In addition, Article 48 (6) of the Law Civil Servants stipulates that in order to qualify as a civil servant one must not be under the obligation to fulfil military service. Article 75(1) of the Military Criminal Code stipulates that those who do not terminate the employment of a person who is considered evader or draft evader upon the receipt of an official notification from the Government will be sentenced to imprisonment from three months to one year. Where this is repeated, they will be sentenced from one to three years. This is applicable to any employment situation including private sector and public sector, including municipalities, banks and associations and professional organizations working for public benefit.

"Fulfilment of military service" for men is the number one condition in every job advertisement either by the state or the private sector. Compulsory character of military service is one of the basic elements that prevents conscientious objectors from exercising their right to work and earn their living.

For example, in 2022 the employer of Kenan Kahya, a conscientious objector working at an NGO, received a notification from the Ministry of National Defence which stipulated that based on the, then in force, Article 93 Law on Military Service and Article 75 of the Military Criminal Law criminal prosecution will be initiated if Mr.Kahya failed to report to the military service branch. As a result of his failure to comply with the requirements of the notification, his employment contract was terminated within a month.⁶⁸ Gökhan Binici, who experiences similar hardship, informed about his situation to an MP.⁶⁹

Hüseyin Civan tells of his experience; *'Even with a bachelor's degree, I am in a position where I cannot work in state institutions. One of the first conditions required in the private sector is that I fulfill my military service obligation. This means working without insurance and informally... I have been trying to sustain my life and the life of my family in this way for a long time. Most of the jobs I worked are short- term. This turns into a constant job search. In other words, I am forced to work informally just because I am a conscientious objector.'*⁷⁰

The most striking figure in the graphic above is related to the right to earn one's living. The questions regarding "getting a job with social security", "being able to work in the state sector" and "dismissal from the job" address the same right. According to the information provided by the objectors between April 2022 and September 2023, 33 out of 92 are dismissed from the job, 49 out of 92 cannot work in the state sector and 52 out of 92 works without having a social security as a result of compulsory character of military service and the lack of legal arrangements for conscientious objection. The real numbers are not known.

Right to property

The right to property is protected by the Constitution, article 35 and as all the fundamental rights it can only be restricted by a court decision.

Nevertheless, the administrative fines given to the conscientious objectors, if not paid, result in confiscation of bank accounts by administrative decisions. This is a real threat for the objectors not to receive their salary or have a deposit in the banks. They need to seek remedies, such as using a friend's bank account, or having to pay the fines to continue their lives.

Osman Murat Ülke experienced the same threat and used a friend's bank account for many years. Recently Zana Aksu's bank account was confiscated in December 2021 however the confiscation was lifted upon his objection.⁷¹ The bank account of Lawyer Gökhan Soysal was confiscated upon two payment orders stemming from the administrative fines by the Istanbul Tax Department in 2021. He opposed the administrative order before the court however his motion was not successful.⁷² Ultimately he had to pay the fines because he could not fulfill his professional activity if he did not pay.

Similarly, bank accounts of 11 out of 92 have been confiscated as it is shown in the graphic above.

Prohibition of torture, inhuman and degrading treatment and right to respect for private life

The pervasive and consistent interference in several fundamental human rights, as illustrated above, paralyzes the lives of conscientious objectors and continues to constitute "civil death" thus amounting to a breach of prohibition of torture, inhuman and degrading treatment as well as right to respect for private life, in particular the protection of the physical and mental integrity of the person. The latter is evident in the interferences in the various human rights highlighted in this submission.

Recommendations

The following section provides practical recommendations to bring Turkey's legislation and practice in line with international human rights standards based on the findings of this submission. It is recommended that;

- conscientious objection to military service be recognized as a constitutional right, without delay, to ensure that legislation on conscientious objection does not come into conflict with other legal regulations and that such regulation is not made open to, possibly restrictive, interpretations of the executive and judicial bodies;
- legislation on conscientious objection to military service should be drafted in compliance with international human rights law as enshrined in the United Nations, the Council of Europe and the European Union human rights instruments;
- an independent and impartial decision-making body to examine conscientious objection claims is established - in compliance with international human right law standards, in particular taking into account the requirement not to discriminate between conscientious objectors on the basis of the nature of their religions or belief;
- measures, that are compatible with international human rights law, are taken to provide a mechanism for the conscientious objectors who declare themselves as "total objectors";
- measures are taken to provide alternative service for those conscientious objectors who request it - various forms of alternative service compatible with international human rights standards;
- key features of the legislation should include the mechanism for determining the status of conscientious objection should be structured accordingly, and that any service that can be provided as an alternative to conscientious objection genuinely civilian in nature, neither deterrent nor punitive and non-discriminatory in effect;
- all criminal proceedings against conscientious objectors are ended, compensation is provided, all convictions regarding conscientious objection in the criminal records for disobedience, draft evasion, desertion, public statements, are expunged.
- statistics are kept on conscientious objection applications including the number of conscientious objectors, on monetary fines and criminal investigations, and convictions delivered in connection to conscientious objectors and shared with the public.

- measures are taken to ensure that the applicants are free from the risk of further prosecution and obligation of compulsory military service and can fully enjoy their political, civil, economic, social and cultural rights.
- regular training is provided for judges and prosecutors on international human rights obligations pertaining to the right to conscientious objection to military service to help ensure the compatibility of the domestic judicial proceedings with applicable international human rights standards.

To international human rights compliance control mechanisms:

- Keep compliance control of the right to conscientious objection to military service on relevant agenda including the CoE Committee of Ministers, UN Human Rights Committee, UN Special Procedures and the UPR.
- Follow up the implementation of UN HRC Opinion on Atasoy and Sarkut v. Turkey and UPR recommendations.
